Course overview

Ranging from the satirical, even salacious, scenes of William Hogarth, through the often shocking socio-political criticism of Georg Grosz's work during the Weimar Republic, to the state-controlled art of Soviet Socialist Realism, this course explores the power of art to criticize and/or celebrate the social and political developments of their times. No previous experience is necessary - just a lively, open-minded interest in art! On this seven week course, topics to be covered will include the work of William Hogarth, Gustave Courbet, Jean-Francois Millet, Georg Grosz and Otto Dix; and also the works of the American Ashcan School (c1890-1914) and Soviet Socialist Realism (1930-); and the social, cultural and political context in which these works were produced.

Course description

On this seven week course, we will look at the satirical, even salacious, scenes of William Hogarth, through the often shocking socio-political criticism of Georg Grosz's work during the Weimar Republic, to the state-controlled art of Soviet Socialist Realism, this course explores the power of art to criticize and/or celebrate the social and political developments of their times.

No previous experience is necessary - just a lively, open-minded interest in art!

Topics to be covered will include the work of William Hogarth, Gustave Courbet, Jean-Francois Millet, Georg Grosz and Otto Dix; and also the works of the American Ashcan School (c1890-1914) and Soviet Socialist Realism (1930-); and the social, cultural and political context in which these works were produced

At the end of the course, you will be able to:

- identify two of the key characteristics of the work of three of the artists under discussion in terms of themes, choice and treatment of subject matter
- describe one of the techniques used by three of these artists in terms of formal elements including medium, style or composition
- identify three of the major influences - social, cultural and/or political on their work
- describe one of the ways in which their works were received - by critics and the public
- recognize one of the works of at least three of the artists explored in this course
