Course overview

Uncover the history and significance of medieval monasteries in Northern England with this archaeological course. Ideal for history buffs and archaeology enthusiasts alike.

Course description

Archaeology: Archaeology of Monasteries in Northern England explores the development and history of monasteries across this region. Participants will study the architecture, cultural significance, and historical context of monastic sites, using archaeological evidence to understand their role in medieval society. The course covers the excavation findings and conservation efforts related to key monasteries in Northern England, such as Fountains Abbey and Rievaulx Abbey. By the end of the course, participants will have gained a deeper understanding of the monastic life, the architecture of these religious structures, and their influence on the surrounding communities. This course is ideal for those interested in archaeology, medieval history, and religious studies.
